Documentation Of Joint FBI-UAW Cointelpro

In Nov. 1975 the United Auto Workers (UAW) initiated a trademark and prima facie tort suit against the National Caucus of Labor Committees, the U.S. Labor Party and associated individuals and organizations. The UAW claimed that the NCLC-USLP twice-weekly newspaper, New Solidarity, was in unfair competition with their inhouse paper UAW Solidarity and infringed on their trademark, which they were granted after the suit was initiated. The UAW also claimed that the defendants in the suit had damaged the reputations of the union leadership by stories printed in New Solidarity. The union asked $30 million in damages and demanded that every copy of New Solidarity ever printed be destroyed.

The UAW's extraordinary demands for relief are the first indication this is no normal trademark infringement suit. FBI documents released under the Freedom of Information Act to the NCLC make it clear that the UAW in fact had been collaborating with the FBI and the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor in gathering information on the NCLC and USLP, whom they all regarded as a major political enemy, and in planning a Cointelpro operation to destroy the organizations.

A full hearing into the UAW's illegal and unethical "dirty tricks" collaboration with the FBI will be held before Judge Lawrence W. Pierce, U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, August 4.

The attached documentation shows that not only has the FBI collaborated closely with the UAW in this suit, but that the UAW was intending to use as its star witness against the USLP, one Gregory Rose — an admitted FBI informant, a petty criminal and purse-snatcher, and a former member of the USLP.

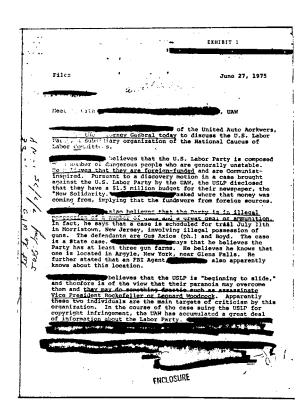

Exhibit 1: FBI memorandum concerning a June 27, 1975 meeting between Stephen Schlossberg, General Counsel of the UAW, and Attorney General Edward Levi, saying that the UAW has accumulated "a great deal of information about the Labor Party."

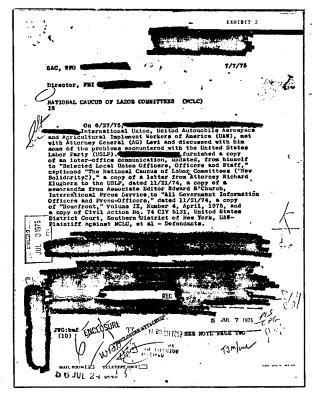

Exhibit 2: FBI memorandum from FBI Director Clarence Kelley to the FBI's Washington, D.C. field office, referring to the above meeting. Confirming the fact that it was Schlossberg himself who met with Levi, is the phrase "(deleted) furnished a copy of an inter-office communication, undated, from himself to "Selected Local Union Officers..." etc. This memo is from Schlossberg

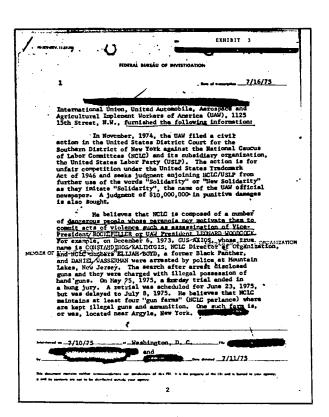

Exhibit 3: FBI transcript of a second meeting with Schlossberg, where Schlossberg gave additional information to the FBI on July 10, 1975. The FBI notes that

INTERVIEW WITH STEPHEN SCHLOSSBERG

(Following are excerpts from a telephone conversation with Stephen Schlossberg, the General Counsel of the UAW, held on July 13, 1977.)

Q: Now, what we would like to know is your opinion of whether or not you think...

A: He's [Greg Rose] genuine? ...He is genuine. ...No question about it. I've ascen his debriefing notes from the FBI and I've had three different lawyers work him over and there's no question in my mind he's genuine.

Q: O.K. The other question would be do you believe that he could substantiate the materials in terms of being a good courtroom vitness...

A: ...Look, I've had a lawyer in Ohio and a lawyer in New York who both feel that he's going to be a superlative witness and that he can substantiate this material. And I think that with the FBI connection it makes it even better.

Q: They would, they would as far as you know give back up, uh, they would give the kind of support that would be necessary to confirm these allegations?

A: Well, I've seen a letter...I've seen a letter from Kelley, saying that he was an informant and he's on the payroll so many months, and I've seen some debriefing notes and I think that you that you wouldn't have anything to worry about.

A: ...Well, there's a lawyer in New York who's handling the case for me, and I'd suggest you might want to talk with him.

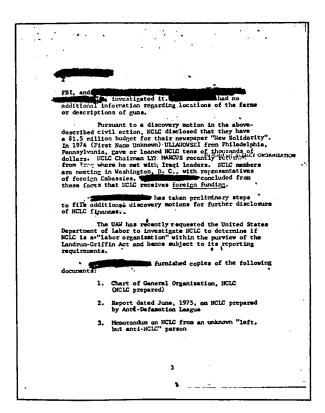

Q: O.K.

A: His name is Roger Zissu, Z-I-S-S-U. He's in the phone book under lawyers or attorneys or whatever they are and he's a very first-class guy.

Q: Right. Now has he spoken to Greg, or does he...?

A: Oh, yes, he's going to use him as a witness....

Exhibit 4: Excerpts from the transcript of a telephone conversation with UAW General Counsel Schlossberg, in which Schlossberg states that he has a letter from Kelley confirming Rose's role as an FBI informant, and that Rose was "on the payroll."

Schlossberg "has taken preliminary steps to file additional discovery motions for further disclosure of NCLC finances."

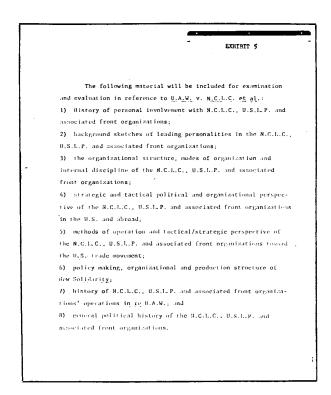

Exhibit 5: The first page of an informant report prepared by Gregory Rose for the UAW at the request of Stephen Schlossberg Schlossberg agreed to pay to Rose an undisclosed amount of money for the background report, composed of wild fabrications and the sort of petty gossip for which FBI files are well known.
