From the Editor-in-Chief

Sometime during the last several weeks, a nuclear war was simulated in which a majority of the American population perished. What could be the purpose of such an exercise? The simulation was conducted by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), as part of a series of preplanned "emergencies" and emergency simulations, any one of which could be used as the immediate pretext for FEMA to become the outright dictatorial government of the United States.

The evidence proving the real purpose behind FEMA is abundant. Only one day prior to the deployment of the sabotage of March 1979 at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant, the Carter administration activated Presidential Review Memorandum 32, establishing FEMA.

National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski has control over this apparatus, which has been authorized to bypass all constitutionally mandated institutions to carry out all the emergency measures it deems necessary. The emergencies could be an oil cutoff from the Middle East, a rash of bankruptcies of major banks, or any of a number of disasters already on the administration's planning board.

FEMA bears a striking resemblance to the emergency provisions inserted into Weimar law to effect the "legal" coup d'état by which Hitler consolidated power.

Our Special Report, "Planning crises: from nuclear disaster to nuclear war," was written by Kathy Burdman and Vin Berg under the direction of U.S. editor Konstantin George. The report documents the history of FEMA activities during the last year, the powers it has and is prepared to exercise, and the "practice" in population-control it has had in such preplanned emergencies as Three Mile Island and the New York transit strike.

We also note for our readers the lead to our International Report, "Will the Soviet Union occupy Sinkiang next?" by contributing editor Lyndon LaRouche. LaRouche analyzes the Soviet shift into a "hard" war avoidance policy, and the Soviet's probable next move given the provocations of the unbalanced controllers of the Carter administration.
