

Philip Is 'Kingmaker' In Brazil Run-Off

by Gretchen Small

Oct. 11—The very bad news, is that Prince Philip and his Green Nazi World Wildlife Fund (WWF) won Brazil's Oct. 3 Presidential elections. That is because Green Party candidate Marina Silva won 20 million votes, enough to make her the "kingmaker" in the Oct. 31 run-off between the two leading contenders. And Silva is a wholly-owned creation of Britain's Prince Philip and his Nazi World Wildlife Fund (WWF).

With Silva's 19.4% vote, double the pre-election projections, and a shocking 42% in the capital Brasilia, and 32% in Rio de Janeiro, the British monarchy seized its intended strategic "spoiler" position, from which to impose its genocidal policies on the next government of Brazil, whoever wins the run-off. Silva announced that only the candidate who adopts her anti-nuclear, anti-development environmentalist agenda will win her support, and both final contenders, Dilma Rousseff of the governing Workers Party (PT), and José Serra, of the opposition Brazilian Social Democratic Party (PSDB), are tripping over themselves to prove who is more "green."

This WWF orchestration of the Brazil elections, is of a piece with the hordes of would-be barbarians being mobilized on the streets of Germany against nuclear power and high-speed rail. This is endgame; the final battle for civilization of which Lyndon LaRouche has repeatedly warned, is underway. Brazil's Russian, Indian, and Chinese associates in that British concoction called the BRIC, in particular, would do well to take note of what happened in Brazil, for it is a direct shot across their bows, as to the future the British intend for them.

To Garden, or Not To Garden

Brazil is the largest nation, in population and territory, in South America. Its advanced scientific and technological capabilities, particularly aerospace and nuclear, are crucial for the development of the continent as a whole.

Über-Greenie Marina Silva, recipient of Nazi Prince Philip's "conservation" award, is positioned to determine the outcome of Brazil's Presidential run-off election. And, she is funded by the circles of Britain's Lord Jacob Rothschild.

What, then, are the implications, not just for South America, but for the global economy, if Philip's WWF succeeds in its immediate, stated intention of shutting down Brazil's nuclear program, ending construction of hydroelectric dams, and reducing its growth of demand for power by 40% over the next 15 years? What will result, if yet more gigantic portions of Brazil's forests, rivers, and even the great agricultural frontier of the Cerrado region, are handed over, as demanded, to the WWF oligarchs, closed to human activity, in the months ahead?

Almost exactly 10 years ago, LaRouche issued a memorandum on the implications of the attack on him, run simultaneously in Australia and Brazil, by the British monarchy, at the outset of the unlamented Bush, Jr. Administration, in January 2001. In the case of Brazil, the WWF-Brasil had initiated a lawsuit against LaRouche's Brazilian associates, which sought to shut down their operations. The WWF-Brasil legal filings revealed their utter panic that they might lose the public policy debate over the genocidal, anti-sovereignty agenda espoused by the British monarchy, if LaRouche's forces were not shut down there.

LaRouche pointed to the underlying issue: the global strategic conflict between LaRouche, representing the human species' creative ability to shape the universe, and the WWF, "which acts in service of its often expressed conviction, that mankind is just another form of beast, fit only to be ruled by beastly predators, its population used, heard, hunted, or culled, as beastly cattle might be." Even then, the collapse of the British imperial system by its own hand threatened to bring down "the whole shebang," if not replaced, LaRouche warned. (See "Look at What Happened in Brazil," EIR, Feb. 9, 2001.)

LaRouche didn't flinch, but his associates in Brazil did, fearfully breaking all ties with LaRouche only two years later, shutting down the EIR office there. The sequel to that WWF victory, is the post-election catastrophe now looming in that country.

Today's overgrown and undeveloped Amazon forest provides a horrifying view of the future face of our Earth, should the WWF succeed in what it intends globally. The Amazon River Basin—roughly the size of the 48 contiguous United States—covers some 40% of the South American continent, reaching into eight countries (Brazil, Bolivia, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia, Venezuela, Guyana, and Suriname, as well as French Guiana).

Far from being the "natural wilderness," which the British empire would have you believe, the Amazon is a product of human engineering extending back at least 12,000 years. Its trees result from orchards planted by generations long gone; its soils along the riverbanks made rich for agriculture by human ingenuity; the wealth of so-called "biodiversity" a result of human improvements in centuries and millennia long gone; its very landscape over vast reaches, proven to have been shaped by the cities, roads, canals, dikes, dams, fish-farming, and ingenious agricultural engineering of far earlier times—a "garden" today so overgrown it is almost unrecognizable.

The WWF's BRIC Billionaires

IPSOS pollster Clifford Young, in an Oct. 4 Woodrow Wilson Center post-mortem on the Brazilian election, ascribed Silva's vote to the "ascendant middle class," and the elite getting rich off that new middle class, a group he called "billionaires with a social conscience."

What Young described, could be called "the BRIC effect." Silva's backing came from the political and economic formations built on the BRIC-centered carry-trade bubble. She received her lowest vote in the impoverished Northeast where she was born.

Silva is a poor child of rubber-tappers, picked up early by the oligarchy, and turned against the development of her own people. One of Brazil's most radical environmentalists, she served as Environment Minister in the Lula government 2003-08, during which she directed, among other things, the first phase of the Amazon Region Protected Areas (ARPA) project, a public-private partnership cooked up by the WWF, which aims to give it direct control over a network of "protected areas" in the Brazilian Amazon, one and a half times larger than the entire U.S. National Parks system. She quit the Lula Administration, after losing several political fights, including the decision to proceed on the Angra 3 nuclear plant, which she adamantly opposed.

After she quit, Silva was invited to attend the meetings of a group of Brazil's richest "green" businessmen, by the billionaire later named to run as her Vice Presidential candidate, Guilherme Leal, a key figure in the WWF apparatus, serving on the WWF Brasil Advisory Board at times, presiding over the Brazilian Biodiversity Fund (Funbio) which controls financing for the ARPA; etc. Leal made his billions from a cosmetics company, Natura, which struck it rich with its line of cosmetics made from Amazon "natural" products.

In October 2008, Prince Philip signalled his personal support for the Silva campaign, awarding her the Duke of Edinburgh Conservation medal, in recognition of her work with ARPA, in particular.

Then, at the right time, Leal led a group of businessmen in joining the Green Party, among them, Fernando Garnero, head of Lord Rothschild's business partners, Brasilinvest.

In April 2010, Leal's close friend, WWF-Brasil president Alvaro de Souza, took a leave of absence from the WWF, to head up the Silva-Leal Campaign Finance Committee. Under Souza's direction, Brazil's business and banking community poured sufficient money in, to transform her campaign from an exotic also-ran, into the would-be "kingmaker" of the next government.
