

A New Peace Order For the 21st Century

by Elke Fimmen

WIESBADEN, GERMANY, May 9—“Yes, we can stop World War III and fascism!”

That is the message that the BüSo (Civil Rights Solidarity Movement), the LaRouche movement in Germany, is pushing during the European Parliament election campaign, with the elections coming up on May 25. If Germany, as the economically and politically strongest nation in Europe, resolutely opposes the imperial confrontationist policies of the British-steered Obama Administration, NATO, and the EU apparatus in Brussels, there is a good chance that the present apocalyptic course can be turned around, and instead a true peace order for the 21st Century be implemented, which is in everybody’s self-interest: the establishment of a Eurasian Union of sovereign nation-states—from Lisbon to Vladivostok—in the context of the World Land-Bridge.

The nationwide 35-candidate slate is headed by BüSo chairwoman Helga Zepp-LaRouche. Candidates are intervening with booktables, leaflet distributions, and town meetings, and find a completely transformed environment, as contrasted to the previous, media-induced mantra: “You cannot change anything!” The population in Germany has been shaken up by the Ukraine crisis, and by the confrontationist policies of the Obama Administration. Germans do not want any more wars, above all, not a thermonuclear one, which would wipe out civilization, but rather, strongly support cooperation in Eurasia for joint economic, social, and cultural development.

Recognition of the War Danger

This sentiment has become quite vocal across party lines in the last couple of weeks, not least through the efforts of the BüSo to awaken people to the great strategic danger originating from the bankrupt British Empire, whose trans-Atlantic financial system of globalization is collapsing rapidly, and will even more rapidly collapse, with the bail-in policies of London and Wall Street.

Thus, campaign organizers encounter a lot of interest in the BüSo campaign poster, which also has a sketch of the Eurasian Land-Bridge (Berlin-Moscow-Beijing). The same concept is elaborated in the official BüSo ad for the elections, which was run twice, by each of the public national TV-stations ARD and ZDF, plus in all state-organized radio channels. While confronting people with the danger of thermonuclear extinction, it orients the population’s fear and anger towards the solution: a Glass-Steagall banking reorganization, a policy of Eurasian cooperation of sovereign nation-states as the only basis for durable peace and a new cultural renaissance.

As the situation on the ground in Ukraine and the war danger continued to escalate, Zepp-LaRouche published a hard-hitting statement on the Western-supported Nazi barbarism in Ukraine (see below). She called upon everybody to remember the sacred oath, which people had pledged in 1945: “Never again—fascism and war!”—and not just to commemorate May 8, the end of the war and Nazism in Europe, but to act accordingly today.

BüSo

“We Germans Can Stop World War—The New Silkroad: Berlin-Moscow-Beijing”