

Obama Is the Problem

As the passionate outpourings of leading Democratic Party strategist James Carville underscore, there has been a sea-change in the attitude of many Americans toward President Obama, even those previously firmly committed to supporting him. Those who previously had fiercely resisted LaRouche PAC's truthful indictment of Obama as a tool of the British financial empire—from his Nazi health plan to his Afghanistan war disaster, and more—are now being forced to face the fact that the President is the chief obstacle to taking the urgent measures required to save the United States, and the world, from total collapse.

What remains is for the American people to act to get Obama out of office immediately—by peaceful, Constitutional means.

Start the updated bill of indictment with the financial crisis we face. The entire global system is at the abyss of a Dark Age. As Lyndon LaRouche has emphasized, only a reimposition of the Glass-Steagall principle in U.S. banking will both protect the U.S. banking system, and provide the basis for the global Glass-Steagall system which is required.

Fortunately, restoring Glass-Steagall is on the table, even in the Congress. But, as the refusal of the Senate leadership to even hear debate on the Cantwell-McCain Glass-Steagall amendment to the Dodd financial reform bill shows, President Obama and his cronies are determined to bury this measure. Obama will continue to try to kill any action on Glass-Steagall, and move to remove any measures in the bill on even containing derivatives speculation, as the House and Senate go into conference discussion on the “reform” bill this week. No patriot can avoid the conclusion: Obama is the problem, and he must be removed from office.

The ongoing British Petroleum (BP) disaster, now threatening to have devastating polluting effects throughout the entire Atlantic Ocean, raises precisely the same issue. As of this writing, there is no evidence that Obama, or his team, took any specific action which helped create the unprecedented oil spill. But the dereliction of duty by the President, to his Constitutional oath to protect the general welfare of the U.S. population, is stunning. Forget the trivial garbage about whether the President is “angry.” Where is the action to contain the disaster?

As numerous sources, including former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Colin Powell (ret.), have pointed out, the only appropriate way to deal with such a disaster is to wage war: Appoint a military coordinator with the power to commandeer the resources, human and material. President Obama has not only not taken such actions, but he has not even declared a national emergency, or moved to take authority away from the guilty party, BP. This, despite the fact that BP is a multiply convicted felon, and still on probation in the Federal courts!

It's clear: There will be no solution as long as British agent Obama is in office.

While these are the two most pressing examples, Obama's kowtowing to British imperial policy on the strategic front—from provocations toward war against Iran, to protecting the drug-pushers in Afghanistan who are funding those killing our troops, to stirring up crises against China—represents a clear-and-present danger to our welfare as well.

As LaRouche put it June 5: You have to remove Obama from office, now! Take Britain's toy away from them—and we can get on with the work that has to be done.
