A Bipartisan Committee of the Sane

In the wake of the LaRouche Youth Movement's deployment on Capitol Hill, during the appearance of snake-oil salesman Al Gore, Lyndon LaRouche laid out the only sane perspective: "I'm building a bipartisan committee of the sane," LaRouche said. "Join, and make it the majority of the sane."

LaRouche's remarks were sparked, in part, by the fact that it was primarily members of the Republican Party who stepped forward to challenge the in-credible Gore on his Global Warming hoax. Democrats who know better—and have every reason to hate what Gore has done to their Party—mostly fell all over themselves in order to heap praise on the racist liar that most of them would have denounced a mere few years ago.

One major cause of this problem can be found in and around the California Democratic delegation, led by Senator Dianne Feinstein, and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi. It turns out that the husbands of both of these legislators are extremely close (and wealthy) friends of Felix Rohatyn, the leading fascist among Democratic Party funders, and the mainstay of political campaign money for the entire California Democratic delegation. Thus, Congressmen like Henry Waxman, and others, who have distinguished themselves by going after the fascists in the Bush Administration, all of a sudden are turning a blind eye to the blatant depopulation agenda of Al Gore's global warming hoax.

Of course, as LaRouche emphasized, the Democratic Party has no franchise on the insanity of the scientific fraud called global warming. "Remind Republican and right-wingers who oppose Gore that this insanity is bipartisan," LaRouche said. "George Shultz is a fascist 'Republican'; Felix Rohatyn is a fascist 'Democrat.'" It is incumbent upon sane individuals in both parties to distance themselves from these bankers' tools, and concentrate on the primary agenda for our nation's future—dumping the Cheney/Bush regime, and putting in place an FDR-style economic policy framework, to save the nation from disaster.

Are the members of the Congressional Black Caucus really going to go along with this Gore program? You only have to glance at Al Gore's book, and listen to his program for a moment, to realize that his proposals will condemn the poor, darker people of this Earth to extinction. Remind them again to watch "The Great Global Warming Swindle," the British Channel 4 refutation of the Gore propaganda film, with its documentation of how Gore's "anti-global-warming" policy leads African nations to have to choose between refrigerating their medicines, and keeping on the lights. The lack of electricity kills.

Are pro-industry members of the Republican Party really going to go along with a program which demands the shutdown of industry, and looks forward to the elimination of major power plants, in favor of relying on your own solar panels and windmills? Of course, those who have the money, like Gore himself, will be allowed to pollute, big-time—but the ordinary entrepreneur or farmer is supposed to get by by cutting back production and consumption. "Back to nature" means poverty, and death.

We have already seen the seeds of a bipartisan coalition for sanity over the recent years. Both Republicans and Democrats came together to stop Dick Cheney's attempt to destroy the Senate's Constitutional powers in the Spring of 2005. Both Republicans and Democrats have come forward to demand an end to the Cheney-Bush drive for perpetual war. There have even been signs of bipartisan motion in favor of addressing the disastrous state of U.S. transport infrastructure.

Indeed, it was just as the potential for a bipartisan alliance to end the war was coming into focus early this year, and as the tremors in the bankrupt world financial system were impelling leaders of both parties to turn toward LaRouche, that Gore's British bankers launched their global, full-court-press on Gore's global warming hoax. The sane agenda got swallowed up in Gore's genocidal drive.

LaRouche and his movement are determined that this sabotage be stopped, now. "I'm in this fight to win, for a new financial system to secure the Earth's next 50 years, for a future for the young generations," LaRouche explained. That's the perspective a sane bipartisan grouping must come together around now—before it's too late.
