

Defeat Today's Fascist Threat!

We are in revolutionary times, as Lyndon LaRouche has recently pointed out, and the populations of many nations, most emphatically including the United States, are in a rage against their ruling institutions. Just consider the implications of the fact that the popularity of the U.S. President hovers at around 20%, while that of Congress is 18%! Under such social conditions, and the outbreak of the full-blown financial and social crisis, of which the current foreclosure and banking crises are only the foretaste, who will lead the nation into a safe haven?

Most importantly, what are the ideas which must prevail if our nation, and the world, are to be saved?

Let's start with the negative: The program of the anti-Global Warming movement, and the bio-fuels advocates, is not only no solution to the current crisis, but it will result in outright genocide. As EIR pointed out in a series of well-documented features aimed at Global Warming guru Al Gore in the earlier part of this year, these "environmentalists" are simply a new incarnation of fascists, perhaps even more deadly than the obvious militarists of yore.

Yet, despite our warnings, and the surfacing of some significant opposition against the warming hoaxsters within the scientific community, it has been so far impossible to stop the Baby-Boomer leadership of most U.S. national institutions, like the Senate, from marching, lemming-like, behind the Gore bandwagon for "greening" America. These "white-collar" chauvinists are rapidly turning brown.

In many cases, the Senators and others who are championing a program of incredibly stupid (and often totally unworkable) low-energy technologies, carbon swap gimmicks, and conservation measures, don't even realize that they are acting as fascists. They "feel good" about "saving the environment," and have never given a second thought to the fact that the cutbacks and price increases which they are demanding are going to have devastating effects in the real world. What are those effects? The inability to produce enough food, energy, housing, and other resources to bring every person on this planet up to a human standard of living.

We can hear the screams now, because the fascist environmentalists, who openly demand depopulation of the world, have already voiced them: "The whole world can't have an American standard of living! There aren't enough resources!" The credulous may repeat such arguments, but the immorality of such a statement cannot be denied. The reality is that the non-green technologies, specifically nuclear power, exist which can create enough wealth to feed, clothe, house, educate, and otherwise uplift this world, if we would but provide the credit for them to be applied. But under the current system, we refuse to use them.

This is what we mean by fascist: an ideology which denies reason, and the value of every human life. The consequences of such an ideology inevitably lead to the horrors we normally associate with fascism, whether its proponents intend genocide or not. And when you enter a period of profound social dislocation, such as the current financial-economic breakdown is causing, the ugliness of race riots, and other violent suppression of revolt, are expected results.

But in this current revolutionary time, there is an alternative to the fascist ideology. Specifically, the alternative can now be seen in the United States, in the emergence of a broad network of local political leaders who have decided that they will take responsibility for the direction of the nation, to make our government live up to its Constitutional commitment to care for the general welfare of the entire population. These local leaders have responded to LaRouche's call for immediate emergency legislation to protect all Americans from foreclosure, and to turn our politics into one of rebuilding, not deconstructing, the nation.

This is a revolutionary concept, because it returns us to our Constitutional roots, away from the British beggar-thy-neighbor concept which has basically reigned since at least the mid-1960s. For this re-invigorated American Revolution to succeed, however, we will have to overturn the fascist movement that is determined to control our institutions of government. As the crisis deepens, the urgency increases. Demand that Congress dump the Greens, and get human. They must start by passing the Homeowners and Bank Protect Act of 2007!
