

Spain's Orwellian "Citizens Security Law" Gag

By Melissa Dykes

Global Research, August 29, 2015

Daily Sheeple 27 August 2015

Region: Europe

Theme: Police State & Civil Rights

If you think our First Amendment rights are being trampled here in America left and right, check out what's going on in Spain.

This woman posted the following picture of a police car parked in a handicapped spot on her Facebook page with the caption "Park where you bloody well please and you won't even be fined."

Now, because of Spain's Orwellian "Citizens Security Law" which went into effect July 1st, they have fined her €800 or nearly $900 USD simply for sharing the picture on social media. Police were reportedly able to track her down within 48 hours.

That's because the so-called "Citizens Security Law," which the people in Spain lovingly refer to as the "gagging law," has a clause that says, "the unauthorised use of images of police officers that might jeopardise their or their family's safety or that of protected facilities or police operations". The fines for this can go up to an astounding €30,000 (nearly $33,700 USD).

Apparently sharing the fact that your local officer can take up a parking spot designated for a handicapped person, an act you would be heavily fined for, is not "legal" in Spain because it "endangers" that cop's "personal safety."

When the police were asked how the photo had put them at risk under the definition of the law, spokesman Fernando Portillo said, "the officers felt the woman had impugned their honour by posting the picture," according to The Guardian. Portillo said police can park wherever they want when they are in an emergency, and the officer in the photo parked in the handicapped spot because someone had vandalized a nearby park.

If you think about this logically, it obviously makes no sense. The only way a picture like that would endanger that cop's safety is if someone saw the photo and got mad enough to commit violence against the cop because he parked in a handicapped spot... in which case, it would actually be the cop endangering his own safety and making himself look bad by parking in a handicapped spot to begin with.

Then again, there's really no point in trying to argue with an Orwellian police state. It's not there to make sense. It's there to control everyone. Completely.

Not that it's even necessary, but to further prove this is simply all about keeping Spain's citizens from speaking out against their police in a public forum, the first guy who got slapped with a fine under the law was someone who merely called his local police "a pack of slackers" on Facebook.

Source The Daily Sheeple

The original source of this article is Daily Sheeple
Copyright © Melissa Dykes, Daily Sheeple, 2015

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Melissa Dykes

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca